

A close-up photograph of a tree trunk with light-colored, textured bark. A vertical line of small, dark, rectangular marks, likely bark beetle entry holes, runs down the center of the trunk. There are also some larger, darker, irregular patches of bark damage or decay visible on the left side of the trunk. The background is out of focus, showing a rocky, reddish-brown ground and some green vegetation.

